

Dr. Brenna Maddox, Dr. Shari Jager-Hyman, and an amazing team of researchers, clinicians, autistic adults, their family members, and other community stakeholders are preparing to launch a large-scale PCORI-funded study focused on suicide prevention for autistic adolescents and young adults. More details about this 5-year multi-site study can be found here: <https://news.unhealthcare.org/2021/08/unc-teacch-researchers-awarded-9-million-for-study-of-suicide-prevention-tailored-for-youth-on-the-autism-spectrum/>

Dr. Maddox at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill will be hiring one master's level study coordinator and two post-bac RAs between January-June 2022 (start date flexible) to work on this PCORI-funded study. Stay tuned for the official job postings. Anyone interested in learning more about these full-time positions can reach out to Dr. Maddox: brenna_maddox@med.unc.edu.
